After an extensive three-year expansion project, the private oceanfront member-owned and operated Hammock Dunes Club recently unveiled a redesigned oceanfront clubhouse.

The Links Clubhouse has been expanded with the addition of a 5,500 square-foot fitness center, a renovated formal dining room and a casual bar and grill with outdoor dining and an open concept kitchen, known as the Dunes Tavern, according to a media release. The new clubhouse was revealed to club members during a private celebration May 3.

The 40,000 square-foot Links Clubhouse overlooks the club's croquet lawn, which is home to one of the largest croquet associations in Florida, and the 18th hole of the Links Course designed by golf course architect Tom Fazio. The Clubhouse enhancement project underscores the club's long-term commitment to health and wellness and innovation, the release states.

In addition to the new fitness center, the club offers a full program of on-demand and personalized fitness instruction, including spinning, yoga, weight training and aqua aerobics, led by the club's health and fitness director, Walter Sam. The popular fitness app MindBody allows members to schedule classes in advance. A new spin studio and fitness instructor were also added and have been popular additions since the fitness center recently opened to its members in March.

The new clubhouse will complement the club's Creek Clubhouse and golf experience at Hammock Dunes. The golf courses at Hammock Dunes Club consistently rank among the top residential courses in the United States by Golfweek. In addition to the Links Course, the club also features the 18-hole Creek Course designed by Rees Jones.
